Mr. Nye, of Nevada, culled up a bill for the relief of Paymaster Rittenhouse, of the Pacific squadron, to indemnity him for the loss of Government hinds, stalen from kis safe. In the discussion of the above measure, Mr. Wisson, who opposed it, said the Government had lost loss than one-quarter of a million through the negligence of Paymasters, since the commencement of the war. He thength is best to hold every one of them to a strict account, and net set a had precedent at this time, when there were so many settlements with Postmasters being made.

Pending the discussion of the above, Mr. Pessentlen said:

The Paris Journal Des Debats contains a four column article from the able pen of M. Gyrardin recapitulating the history of the Mexican expedition, and terminating with an earnest caff on the Emperor to withdraw the French troops at once. The general tenor of the article went to show that the feeling of the people of the United States was strongly hostile to Maxmillan, and that the Government of the United States, while constantly relievator this fact in its official communication, had constantly abstained from menace, and that the language of the American Government had always been as conciliatory and as free from menace, in 1888, after their victory over the rebellion, as in 1883, at the moment of their greatest international struggle, that in all this both the government and people of the greatest international struggle, that in all this both the government and people of greatest international stringgle, that in all this, both the government and people of the United States had shown, that although deeply offended at the Mexican expedition, and that although hostile to the continuance of the French flag in Mexico, they nevertheless desired to remain triends with France, and were willing to forhear to the internost in order to give the Emperor thee to make a full trial of the experiment, and to retire without being meunced.
